April is Child Abuse Prevention Month

All children deserve to grow up in a nurturing home, with safe places to play and with adults who guide and love them - yet not all children do. Franklin County Children Services (FCCS) receives thousands of reports of child abuse each year and served more than 28,000 children and their families last year.

Child Abuse Prevention Month is a time when FCCS educates the community about the issue of child abuse by hosting a community breakfast and the Pinwheels for Prevention awareness campaign. These spinning childhood toys will draw attention to both the harsh realities of child abuse and the hope of changing the lives of children for the better. The agency's annual Child Abuse Prevention Breakfast will be held on Wednesday, April 10 at The Aladdin Shrine. This event, hosted by Children Services and its Citizens Advisory Committee, honors those who have promoted child abuse prevention and those who have overcome its effects. College scholarships will be awarded to youth; an outstanding child protection social worker will be honored; and youth and families will be honored for making positive life changes.

FCCS has partnered with Ohio Children's Trust Fund, through a federal grant for community-based child abuse prevention, to promote the Pinwheels for Prevention campaign. This effort will enhance awareness about child abuse by displaying blue pinwheels throughout the community. The color blue has become an iconic symbol of child abuse prevention. FCCS also encourages all Ohioans to join the state child welfare agencies that will Wear Blue on April 10 as a wide-sweeping show of support for our cause.

Children Services will stress to the Central Ohio community that prevention depends on finding solutions to the problems that cause child abuse. With the help of local and statewide agencies and organizations, FCCS prevents child abuse through education, information, help for parents under stress, and through successful intervention programs.
